

Fariman Jabbarzadeh

Fariman Jabbarzadeh is an internationally recognized Iranian musician, composer, and producer, born in 1985. He began his artistic career in the early 2000s by reinterpreting songs by renowned international pop artists, standing out for his musical sensitivity and unique ability to blend Eastern and Western sounds.

In 2005, he released his debut album, Vasvase, which achieved significant success in the Iranian music scene, establishing his reputation as a charismatic and innovative artist. Since then, he has continued to produce music, collaborating with artists from diverse cultural backgrounds and experimenting with new musical languages.

His deep understanding of the arts and intercultural vision allow him to bring a unique perspective to artistic evaluation, contributing to the discovery and promotion of emerging talents and creative expressions.

Today, Jabbarzadeh lives between Iran and Italy, where he remains committed to fostering dialogue between the arts, music, and cinema. His work and presence represent a cultural bridge between East and West, marked by a dedication to quality, innovation, and international artistic collaboration.